Some of His Successes

In this hospital his advanced surgical methods astounded the medical work. Two weeks after amputation wounced soldiers were walking about on artificial legs. Dr. DePage said last nighgt that he personally knew of many cases where men who had lost an arm or two were at work with tools fifteen days later.

He explained that the muscles adjoining the artificial limb were utilized before they had time to stiffen and become useless.

Dr. DePage will explain some of the technical features of his work and interest local surgeons in the international league of hospitals at 4 o'clock this afternoon at the New York Hospital, 8 West 16th Street. He will lecture to-morrow at Cornell University before leaving for visits to Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington.
